Description: World Language instructors and curriculum developers will learn to use backward design to create thematic units based on CT's World Language learning standards, higher-order thinking skills, and learning situations for K-12 World Language learners to build their capacity to use the targeted language spontaneously in real-life situations. Participants will identify essential content knowledge and skills that students should have in order to communicate with and understand people and cultures from other countries. Participants will review various performance tasks, performance rubrics, and assessments and will leave with a "roadmap"/"framework" to help their learners develop competence to communicate effectively and interact with cultural understanding.

Audience: World Language teachers and curriculum developers
